A New Season, a Strong Team, and a Commitment to Our Clients

April marks the return of baseball, a season of fresh starts and the promise of better days ahead. As a lifelong Mets fan, I'm eager to see what the team from Queens can do this year with the addition of Juan Soto. Yankees fans, of course, are used to expecting a great year; it comes with the territory. But with Steve Cohen at the helm, Mets fans are finally starting to understand what it feels like to head into a season with that same kind of optimism year after year. No matter whom you root for, the start of the season always brings a renewed sense of hope and possibility.

This season feels especially meaningful for me because my son is starting his high school baseball career. Watching him take the field reminds me why I love this sport — it's not just about wins and losses; it's about teamwork, growth, and learning how to handle challenges. Success in baseball and in life comes from having the right team behind you.

The same holds true in our office.

We're fortunate to have an incredible team working together every day to support our clients. Amira Capric, our intake specialist and scheduling coordinator, is often the first person you'll speak with when you reach out to us. She makes sure new clients feel heard and supported from the start, gathering important details and getting everything organized.

Amira also manages our calendar, scheduling meetings, depositions, and deadlines to keep things running smoothly. She's the person who keeps everything on track behind the scenes.

Kim Du Plessis, our pre-litigation paralegal, plays a key role in helping clients through the early stages of their cases. She collects and organizes medical records, handles lien resolution, and manages insurance claims. Kim's eye for detail helps build strong cases long before they reach the courtroom.

Riekie van Ellinckhuyzen, our litigation paralegal, handles the cases that go to court. She manages legal filings, prepares court documents, and ensures every case is ready for trial. Riekie also helps train and mentor other team members so we're always operating at our best. When a case gets complicated, Riekie is the steady hand that keeps everything moving forward.

But our team extends beyond the office. We work closely with a talented network of professionals — from our marketing team and financial advisors to business coaches, training companies, and software providers — who help us deliver the best possible service. Their expertise allows us to stay organized, improve efficiency, and continually enhance the experience we provide. Just like a baseball team relies on its coaches and scouts, we rely on this broader network to help us perform at our best.

We genuinely enjoy the work we do and the people we work with. Helping our clients isn't just about the legal details; it's about supporting them through challenging times. That's why we take the time to listen and guide them step by step.

As baseball season begins, there's a sense of excitement in the air — a reminder that with the right team behind you, anything feels possible. We feel that same sense of purpose in our work every day. Whether preparing for a trial, resolving a claim, or simply answering a question, we're proud to work together to support our clients.

If you need guidance, we're here for you. We love what we do and are grateful for the trust our clients place in us. Here's to a great season — on the field and in the work we do every day.

GOING DANGEROUSLY ROGUE

SCIENTISTS' SURPRISE: STUDENTS SERVED RADIOACTIVE OATMEAL

Students at a state special-needs school in Massachusetts decades ago flocked to join the school's Science Club, lured by gifts, promises of field trips, and hopes of emotional support from the scientists in charge.

What they received instead was a daily dose of radioactive oatmeal.

As part of a secret experiment by the Quaker Oats Company and the Massachusetts Institute of Technology (MIT), dozens of boys at Fernald State School during the late 1940s and early 1950s were fed oatmeal laced with radioactive tracers. The goal was to study their bodies' absorption of iron and calcium and prove the cereal's nutritional benefits. Some boys also were injected with radioactive calcium.

A student named Fred Boyce and about 70 other boys ages

10–17 were eager to join the Science Club mainly for the perks enjoyed by members. Boyce, who was sent to the school after his parents abandoned him, also hoped the scientists might intervene on the students' behalf and report dismal conditions at Fernald, where students, many of whom were mentally disabled, were abused and treated brutally. Boyce and others received no help from the scientists, however, and weren't even informed they were subjects of a scientific experiment until more than 40 years later.

"We didn't know anything at the time," Boyce told Smithsonian magazine.

"We just thought we were special."

The study at Fernald, originally named the Massachusetts State School for the Feeble-Minded, was led by an MIT professor of nutrition. No one raised objections at the time. At the dawn of the Atomic Age, most Americans saw science as a powerful force for progress — the Atomic Energy Commission approved dozens of human experiments with radioactivity. The importance of ethics review boards and informed consent of research subjects was nowhere on scientists' radar at the time.

Not until 1972, when the Associated Press reported on a Tuskegee Institute study in which Black men with syphilis were promised treatment they never received, did Congress finally pass legislation protecting people from unethical research.

Scientists later determined the boys at Fernald didn't suffer serious health effects; one said the exposure was about the same as 30 chest X-rays. For students like Boyce, however, the injuries ran deep. Thirty former Fernald students later sued Quaker Oats and MIT and were awarded $1.85 million in a 1998 settlement.

Dear Diary,

Please Don't Be Used Against Me in Court

Many of us have fond memories of writing in diaries or journals throughout our youth. We would share our thoughts and feelings in a book we would keep hidden from friends, family members, and others. It was our sanctuary where we could be ourselves without worrying about judgment or embarrassment. You may even remember the feeling of rage or hopelessness when you spotted your brother or sister holding your diary. Thankfully, there usually wasn't anything too incriminating in our teenage diaries, and some of us have continued the practice well into adulthood. However, a recent news story proves we should be cautious about the information we share in our private journals.

Last year, a Minnesota woman was arrested for auto theft. While investigating the incident and looking into Vanessa Guerra, a suspect in the case, a law enforcement officer allegedly found her diary. He flipped through the pages, looking for any information that would catch his eye, when he stumbled upon an entry from Aug. 12, the same day a 2004 Ford Freestar van was stolen and resold at an auto salvage business.

"Totally stole a car today! Something I never thought of doing," Guerra allegedly wrote in her diary.

Guerra was charged with receiving stolen property and theft, although she claims she didn't know the vehicle was stolen. However, workers at the auto salvage business informed law enforcement they recognized Guerra as the seller of the stolen vehicle.

Most people will probably not blab to others about crimes they have committed, especially if they are currently unsolved. This case reminds us to be just as cautious about what we write in private journals. While your diary may be your safe place to share your innermost thoughts and feelings, your entries could come back to haunt you if you're involved in a criminal case, especially if you blatantly admit to the crime.

Unpack Parenting's 'Mental Load'

FINDING PEACE IN MODERN PARENTING

Parenting is a labor of love, but let's face it — sometimes, it just feels like labor. The mental load of raising kids and running a household creates a constant to-do list in your head: planning parent-teacher conferences, organizing meals, managing schedules, and worrying about everything in between. With nearly half of parents saying their stress is overwhelming, it's clear we're carrying more than we can handle. But the good news is that you don't have to carry it alone.

Forget the Instagram Fantasy

We've all been there — scrolling through picture-perfect family photos on social media and wondering how everyone else makes parenting look so effortless. But let's get real. No one's life is as polished as their posts. Instead of measuring yourself against unrealistic standards, focus on what makes your family happy and healthy. Spoiler alert: It's not homemade Pinterest lunches or spotless playrooms.

Find Your Village (and Use It!)

Parenting wasn't meant to be a solo sport. Whether it's friends, family, or other parents, building a strong support system can make all the difference. And if you have a partner, open conversations about sharing the workload can lighten the load for everyone. Remember that asking for help isn't a sign of weakness; it's a superpower.

Perfect Is Boring — Be Real Instead

Let go of the idea that you need to be the perfect parent. Perfection is overrated and impossible. Life throws curveballs, and part of raising resilient kids is showing them how to handle challenges without losing your cool. Be kind to yourself, and embrace the "good enough" mindset. You don't need to do it all, and your kids don't need you to be flawless — they need you to be present.

Go From Overwhelmed to Empowered

The mental load of parenting will never disappear entirely, but it doesn't have to weigh you down. When you ditch unrealistic expectations, lean on your village, and embrace imperfection, you can find more balance and joy in the chaos. Parenting is messy, exhausting, and sometimes downright hard — but it's also beautiful, rewarding, and full of unforgettable moments. So, take a deep breath, give yourself some grace, and remember: You're doing a great job. You've got this.

- 4 A Pizza Delivery Nightmare in Florida

WHEN DELIVERY DISPUTES GO TOO FAR

A $2 TIP TURNS VIOLENT

What started as a birthday celebration for a 5-year-old girl quickly took a dark turn when a Florida delivery driver stabbed a woman multiple times over a bad tip. According to court documents, the December 2024 incident occurred at a Central Florida motel where the victim, her boyfriend, and daughter were staying.

The Incident

After placing a $33 delivery order from Marco's Pizza, the victim, Melinda Irizarry, tipped the delivery driver $2. Dissatisfied with the tip, the driver, 22-year-old Brianna Alvelo, reportedly returned to the motel with an unidentified male. Alvelo and her accomplice allegedly forced themselves into Irizarry's motel room, brandishing a revolver.

The attackers forced Irizarry's boyfriend into the bathroom, and Alvelo produced a pocketknife before rummaging through the group's belongings. Irizarry turned to shield her daughter and reached for the motel phone when Alvelo allegedly began attacking her with a knife, inflicting multiple stab wounds to her legs, arms, chest, and abdomen.

The attackers fled the scene, and Irizarry was taken to a local hospital. In addition to 14 stab wounds, Irizarry suffered a ruptured lung during the attack. While receiving treatment, she also discovered she was pregnant. Alvelo was later arrested and charged with multiple counts, including attempted murder, kidnapping, and home invasion with a firearm. Her accomplice remains at large.

Unusual Nature of the Case

This case stands out not only for its brutality but also because it flips the typical narrative involving delivery drivers. According to the Bureau of Labor Statistics, delivery drivers are more at risk of assaults than other professions. While disputes over tips are not unheard of, they rarely lead to violence. However, reports of assaults among delivery workers, particularly in the gig economy, are surprisingly common. Studies show that 1 in 5 food app workers are assaulted on the job, and over one-third of delivery drivers feel unsafe.

Regardless of who is on the receiving end, cases like these underscore how everyday activities can lead to life-altering events with serious consequences for all involved. Always be vigilant.
